THE PROBLEM

The opportunities were everywhere. They just weren't easy to find.

Some of the best parts of my internship happened in conversation — at lunch, at a networking event, in passing. That's how I heard about a mentor in another division, an exciting field day out on an active project site, a project that could use a fresh set of eyes.

CDOT already offers so much of this. It's just spread across emails, resource sites, Teams, networking events, and the people who happen to know — so for a new intern, a lot comes down to who you talk to.

I kept wondering how much I might be missing simply because I didn't know where to look.

WHERE THE INFORMATION LIVES TODAY

Email

Resource websites

Teams

Networking events

Hallway conversations

In someone's memory

Individual employees

When discovery is hard, everyone loses.

Interns

Spend weeks figuring out what already exists.

New employees

Onboard slower without a clear map of the org.

Rotational engineers

Struggle to find their next-best rotation.

Mentors

Stay invisible to the people who need them.

Managers

Can't easily surface their team's work.

CDOT

Misses chances to put talent where it thrives.

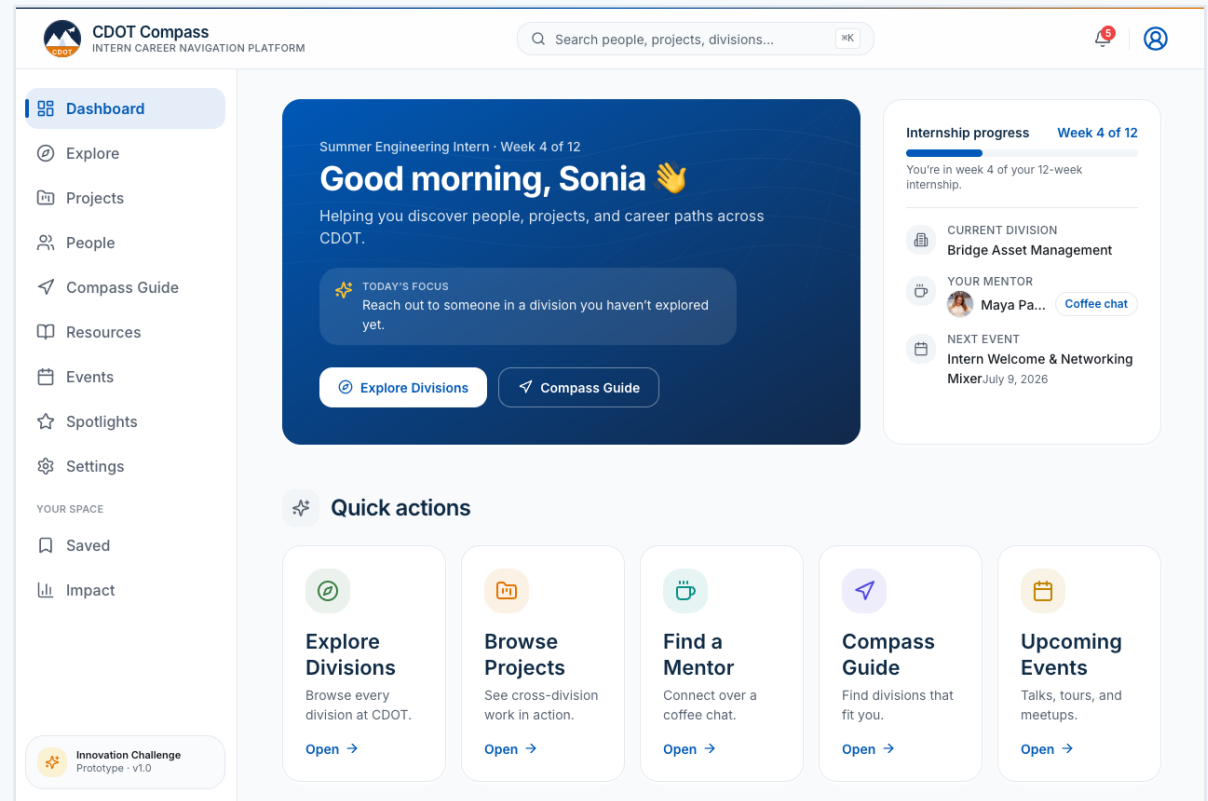

The real cost: CDOT may unintentionally miss the chance to connect talented people with the divisions where they'd thrive.

One place to discover everything CDOT already offers.

CDOT Compass doesn't create new programs. It makes the people, projects, and pathways that already exist visible, searchable, and easy to act on.
